Thoughts by Linda Martin on the Show

Unfortunately, I didn't do a critique in the ring, but here are a few afterthoughts - please excuse the brevity in some cases!

Bull Terrier (Miniatures)

BOB & Dog CC - not the head of the reserve, but much better anatomically. The bitch winner was a little steep in forequarter but had a pretty head and nice body shape. Her rear movement let her down.

Bull Terriers

Baby Dog - Promising young fellow - head pleasant both views, quite 'together' for a youngster of his age. I liked the 2nd dog also, but he's a little gangly at the moment.

Minor Dog - Difficult to choose between 2 young chaps here: litter brothers obviously, but with different points to offer. I leant for the cleaner lines of 1st today, with better head, but 2nd was a little shorter in body. It'll be interesting to see how they mature.

Puppy Dog - Both entries in this class limped, consequently I could not award either.

Junior Dog - Typey dog, a little lacking in substance for his size, I thought. Straightish rear end.

Intermediate Dog - Tall, but still substantial dog. Pleasing in profile; to be fussy, could have a tad more fill in head. Good front and neck flowed well into body. Well turned rear.

Aust Bred Dog - Well packed head with a profile too. Good bone for his size. Presents a nice outline, pushed the CC winner hard.

Open Dog - Strong powerful dog, but just lacked the balance of the previous two dogs when in the CC lineup.

Baby Bitch - a tall girl and a glamour. Pretty head, with sufficient fill. Lovely topline and beautiful rear. A speck long, she has the time to grow into herself.

Minor Bitch - look out big girls - here she comes! Just took my eye as certainly one to watch for in the future. Only 6 months she pushed in a quality CC lineup. Litter sister to the 2 minor dogs, well done!

Puppy Bitch - this girl is a total package all wrapped up in a little parcel. Short and compact, lovely deep chest, more than sufficient in head and type, her neck flowed into her topline which flowed into her rear. She transported it around in no uncertain terms either.

Junior Bitch - a short and very powerful bitch with an attitude. Could have a bit more in profile, but plenty of fill under the eye. Short and compact.

Intermediate Bitch - a quality bitch with an excellent expression. A real powerpack: a tall girl, but strong with it. Could have a little more profile but good length of head filled all the way through. Just barely missed in CC lineup to a shorter bitch.

Aust. Bred Bitch - another big strong girl. Just not the overall balance to push the big guns today.

Open Bitch - fine athletic bitch, front not her virtue. Lovely turn of stifle and pleasant in profile. Seeing her stand next to No 2 was from one extreme to another - who, sadly was in dire need of Jenny Craig! Was it the fat to cause her topline to dip behind such a nicely-laid shoulder?

Thankyou for having me to judge at your show - your hospitality (as always) left nothing to be desired.

My overall thoughts were that:

- Bitches were streets in front of the dogs - quality wise and constructionally
- I was really happy to see some promising youngsters - hopefully a forecast of even better things to come
- Hind movement, particularly in the dogs, generally left a lot to be desired. It varied from extremely close, to lacking in drive, some were 'throwing' one leg, and a few limped. Sad.
- Overall, fronts were a bit better, though the old shoulder construction still evades many. I noticed an increased number of floppy pasterns; not necessarily turned pasterns as we have seen over the years, but pasterns that actually flop up and down whilst on the move. Not good. Back to the drawing board.
