Presidents Report

Hello Members,

Isn't it wonderful spring is here and I for one can't wait for the rain to go away, I know we need it but I've had an overload of it.

We have just returned from the Northern Districts Inaugural Ironbark show. What a weekend! Very interesting concept, my congratulations to the winners, it was a great entry and catching up with everyone is always fun.

Don't forget the AGM and our Major Shows in Nov and I hope to see you there...

Alison Sutcliffe

BTCV President.

Secretary Report

Hi All,

Well the committee have been hard at work in preparation for our upcoming events.

Recently I have been trying to update some of Expo materials in advance of the Melbourne Show. I am hoping to make our lives easier by creating more versatile and easy to set up displays instead of the time consuming job of pinning tonnes of posters to a wall or back board and then having to pull them down again. It has been a struggle time-wise but if I can get at least a brochure completed before the show that will be a start. If you are going to the show, the bullies will be on Sunday the 18th September, please pop in and say hello. If anyone is ever interested, we are always in need of volunteers to help us man expos and days like the show. It is very hard when left up to the same committee over and over again and is a very long day for us and the dogs.

By the way, a big thanks to Adam Combes for stepping onto committee at our last Special General Meeting, every hand is sorely needed!

We are also beginning preparations for our upcoming show in November, the schedule is in this newsletter. I hope everyone will support the show and even if you don't show your dogs, come down and have a look and buy something from our Promo Stand. Our Promo Officer Jacqui has been working hard behind the scenes to find some awesome bully items for our table, particularly unique items that you won't have seen before. And our Vice President, Sherri, has been busily hounding companies for sponsorship and products to raffle or auction off and she has secured some fabulous items so far.

On that note, if you or your business would like to sponsor our show, the donation sheet is in this newsletter. I hope we can fill the sheet!

Cheers Deb

Kidney Disease “The Silent Killer” and where we stand today.

By Deborah Patterson - With thanks to Susie and Debbie from Arcazy.co.uk who kindly allowed me to use the article on their website for part of this piece.

Recently I had a scare with a couple of my dogs, who both produced high UPC readings from a urine test. Fortunately it all turned out to be related to an infection and all follow up tests and scans found the dogs had healthy kidneys and both returned to normal readings, however it scary enough for me to go on a mission to see where we were on kidney disease in the breed at the present moment. Have breeders become complacent with testing or is there no reason to test any more? How accurate is our testing regime and what can influence it? I wondered how many new breeders are aware of the problems that riddled the breed back in the 90's (which ultimately sent it into demise) and thought it worthy of a little (sort of) refresher.

So how recently did you walk your bully down the street and hear a passer by say “Wow, I love those dogs, but you never see them anymore.” I think I get that at least once a month. Bull terriers used to be the staffordshire bull terriers of the world. Some of our long time breeders will often recall that back in the breed's heyday, we used to get 100 dogs to a members comp held in a country town I haven't even heard of. Crazy to imagine because now we can't get eight dogs to a members comp held at KCC Park! Committee members were in excess of twenty people, and it was prestigious to be involved with the club. So what happened?

Kidney Disease (KD) is what happened, thanks to a few popular stud animals who prolifically spread their best genes and their worst ones, and when it struck, it was a tsunami! Some breeders euthanised entire kennels of breeding animals and gave up breeding altogether. The breed's popularity diminished and people moved on. It is for this reason if you are a breeder or you want to become one, you need to know about KD. The lessons learned from this piece of bull terrier history are important.

The two main types of KD affecting the Bull Terrier are Hereditary Nephritis (HN) and Polycystic Kidney Disease (PKD). HN was well recognised in the breed in the 90's and PKD was present in some dogs (interestingly these dogs were often diagnosed with a heart condition as well).

Both HD and PKD are inherited diseases for which there is no cure, however, there are screening tests available to help detect early signs of the disease so these dogs are hopefully not used in breeding programs and the best treatment can be given as early as possible, hopefully improving the life of the dog.

What do the Kidney's do?

The kidney's primary function is to filter harmful toxins from the body through the urine. In the process of urine formation, the kidneys also regulate:

- The volume of blood plasma - and thus contribute significantly to the regulation of blood pressure
- The concentration of waste products in the blood

- The concentration of electrolytes and other ions on the blood plasma, and
- The PH of plasma

If the kidneys do not work correctly, it can have a devastating effect on the body. As the kidneys degenerate, the body fills with toxins, poisoning the blood, raising the blood pressure and concentration of electrolytes, and the PH of the plasma will fluctuate causing stress to other organs.

The Signs of Kidney Disease

Quite often, there are no signs, or they are missed or confused with symptoms for other things. Some signs include:

- Increased water consumption
- Increased urination
- Bad breath (end stages)
- Sudden weight loss (end stages)
- Blisters (end stages)
- Shivering (end stages)
- Lethargic (end stages)
- Vomiting (end stages)
- With PKD dogs are often “squirters” constantly having loose stools
- Dogs may show one, none, or all of these symptoms.

Many affected dogs will live a normal life, showing no signs of illness until the kidneys have less than 25% function left. This can happen over a few days and the dog deteriorates so fast the owner is in shock! In the end, when the kidneys pack it in, there is nothing to do but humanely euthanise the animal.

There is no cure for KD, some diets and medication may slow it down but the end result is still death. The age range can be between 2-10 years old. Because many owners are unaware of the illness, the dogs are bred from and it continues on.

How is HN and PKD inherited??

Extensive research was conducted in Australia in the 1990's into KD affecting the bull terrier. Medical research was conducted and pedigrees were examined, some dogs were sacrificed to this research! It was found that both HN and PKD were an autosomal dominant hereditary disease. This means that each dog carrying the KD gene will develop KD in its life and only one parent needs to have it to pass it on to roughly half the litter.

Testing for PKD

A breeding animal can be cleared of PKD by ultrasound from a young age. Not all veterinary surgeries have the most sensitive ultrasound machines but in Melbourne, the Melbourne Uni veterinary surgery in Werribee will perform the procedure for breeders for $96 (2016 price), which includes mild sedation and a certificate (note for show dogs that the belly area will be slightly shaved). I am aware other vets (including the Monash vet in Clayton) also offer the service but I have not enquired of the prices recently. There is some conjecture as to whether PKD is necessary to test for anymore. It seems the hard work of breeders may have eliminated this disease from bull terriers so it is a personal choice. In my opinion it doesn't hurt to know that your dogs have two healthy looking kidneys to start with. I have also found a couple of companies that claim to have a DNA test available for PKD, such as LABOKLIN in the UK, and I am looking further into this.

Testing for HN

The Urine Protein Creatinine (UPC) ratio test is the best way to screen for correctly functioning kidneys. This test checks for how much protein is in the urine. If there is too much, it suggests kidney problems and further investigation should be done. A good secondary test is the SDMA test, a recently available blood test (ask your vet if you haven't heard of it). The UPC test costs around $70 and should be done at least yearly with breeding animals.

The UPC ration for a dog should be below 0.5. For bull terriers it is preferred that it be less than 0.3 (but many vets are not aware of this). The research done in Australia many years ago proved that dogs with consistent ratios over .03 usually went on to develop kidney disease.

Something to note with UPC testing is that the result can vary by 80% in one day, therefore taking a spot check of one day on one year is not necessarily a good way to do it. Melbourne University advises that the latest research recommends to take samples for three to four days in a row. These samples can then be pooled and a UPC taken from it which will show an average UPC across the four days (many vets are also not aware of this).

When collecting urine it should be collected in a sterile jar, from the first morning's flow, mid stream. It is also recommended that the dog is fasted the night before. It should be noted that bitches must not be in or near to a heat cycle when blood would be present in the urine and therefore give a false result.

The UPC test does not detect kidney disease, it detects that the kidneys are not filtering properly. If your bully returns a reading over 0.3 then you should not breed from the animal for the mean time. You need to rule out urinary tract infections, bladder infections, and other infections, your dog should be free of medications such as steroids or antibiotics as these can also produce false readings. It is recommended at this point that a follow up sample be obtained directly from the bladder by your vet, this avoids any possible contamination as the urine passes from the bladder, through the urinary tract to your sample cup. Your vet should be able to take a sample from a full bladder with a syringe and ultrasound (if your dog is not calm, sedation may be required).

If your dog still returns a ratio over 0.3 then you don't need to panic (just yet) but you should definitely not breed from the animal for the moment. Wait a few months and re test, but in the meantime, get a blood test and look at his other vitals including thyroid. If the dog consistently returns a ration over 0.3 the only 100% definitive way to confirm hereditary nephritis is to have the kidney biopsied and this is not as simple as it sounds.

Kidney Biopsy

To take a biopsy of the kidney is not a difficult procedure, however it is the analysis of that sample that poses a problem. According to Melbourne Uni, there are only two reliable places they would have kidney samples looked at to detect HN, somewhere in the Netherlands, and Ohio State University, USA. For USA (which was their preference) the cost is around $1000 per sample (plus postage), so you want to be pretty certain your dog has a case before forking out this kind of money.

With all the research done in the past in Australia I found it odd that the samples needed to be sent overseas, however apparently whilst Australia has the the equipment to view the samples, there is no one looking at HN on a regular basis in the country (not anymore anyway). The kidney sample must be looked at using “electron microscopy”. The electron microscope is a type of microscope that uses a beam of electrons to create an image of the specimen. It is capable of much higher magnifications and has a greater resolving power than a light microscope, allowing it to see much smaller objects in finer detail. They are large, expensive pieces of equipment, generally standing alone in a small, specially designed room and requiring trained personnel to operate them. The viewpoint of the university is that they would prefer to send samples to people trained at looking for HN everyday than to someone who knows how to use the equipment but has never seen what they are looking for.

With all this in mind it is fair to say that the problem of KD in bull terriers has declined to the point that it has become rare, a testament to the breeders of the day who did their best to oust it. But this means that when faced with symptoms of KD, many vets of today are now scratching their heads and not sure how to deal with it or labelling a suspected kidney disorder as a hereditary one because the breed is a bull terrier, without doing any follow up tests to confirm it.

To all bull terrier owners it is worth remembering that even vets who have been practicing for fifteen years, will not see a great deal of bull terriers through their practice on a yearly basis and a and when faced with symptoms of kidney disease, behavioural issues, skin problems etc. they may tackle the problem without knowledge of the specific requirements of bull terriers, or will make assumptions based on the breed history without doing any further investigation.

To all pet owners and new breeders, don't forget that your breeder or your state Bull Terrier Club can be a vital source of information. Some vets do not appreciate the knowledge and experience that a breeder can provide in the diagnosis of an animal's condition. Yet if you were to compare how many litters a vet delivers compared to some breeders per year, or how many bull terriers a breeder sees compared with a vet, or the access a breeder has to other breed specialists who have been in the job for longer than the vet has been alive you have to ask, why wouldn't their experience be valid? So when I find a good vet who wants to listen and is interested in learning more on the topic I hold onto them with both hands and beg them to tell me if they ever change clinics!

In closing I would like to state that I tried to contact Dr Caroline O'Leary from University of QLD who was involved with much of the kindey research on bull terriers but I was not successful in contacting her (yet). I am also trying to find out about any genetic testing that is being done by the Animal Health Trust in the UK and they are getting back to me.

Seriously get these two off MY couch

Oh Malcolm, what are you doing?

Warning for dog owners
Some imported jerky treats may cause kidney dysfunction.
Know what to look out for!!!

Vets across the UK have reported seeing an increased number of dogs presenting with kidney problems which may be linked to the ingestion of imported dried jerky treats.

The dogs have shown a decreased appetite, increased thirst and increased need to urinate. Many of these dogs had been fed dried jerky type dog treats, specifically chicken or duck. While a cause is unknown, all the treats were identified as originating from China.

The clinical signs (tiredness, decreased appetite, increased thirst, and increased need to urinate) are vague and non-specific but blood and urine testing are indicative of a rare kidney disorder, and include a higher than normal glucose level in the urine, together with a normal blood glucose level. Other possible causes for the presence of glucose in the urine, such as diabetes, kidney infections or leptospirosis were excluded.

Dog owners are advised to make an appointment with their vet where they have noticed any of these clinical signs in their dog and are feeding him or her jerky treats which are suspected to be imported.

This syndrome has previously been reported in Australia and the USA (since 2007), as well as in smaller numbers in the UK and Europe, in association with the ingestion of dried jerky treats. Currently, no specific toxin has been identified as the cause.

Mellora Sharman, Internal Medicine Clinician at the Animal Health Trust, said:
“If you are in any doubt about feeding jerky treats to your dog, double check the country of origin on the packaging. The important thing is that most dogs respond well if the treats are removed from their diet promptly after noticing the clinical signs: increased thirst, loss of appetite and increased need to urinate.

“Some dogs may require hospitalisation and supportive medication but the more extreme cases of this syndrome so far appear to be less common in the UK. If you are currently feeding these types of treats to your pet and have any concerns, you should make an appointment with your vet and take the packaging of any treats with you to discuss in the consultation.

“It’s impossible to say what the cause of the syndrome is at this stage, as nothing has been proven yet. Several possible causes have been explored, such as the presence of salmonella, pesticides, glycerin, antivirals and level of irradiation in the treats, but none of these have been confirmed to be linked to the illness in dogs so far.”

More information on this syndrome in America and the steps taken so far to investigate the cause can be found on the U.S Food and Drug Administration website: www.fda.gov

No food? so I'll eat the fridge

COULD this cute fella be Victoria's naughtiest pet? Murphy is a very well-bred bull terrier — dad is a champion from England and mum is a prize-winning show dog in Australia.

But no one told him that meant he should be a model pet. His long list of offences, according to long-suffering owner Leigh Pride, from Carrum Downs, include destroying the fridge.

"Murphy used to walk in and flick open the fridge door with his paw, then eat the dog food that was stored in there," Leigh says. "One day there was no food, so he got mad and ate the fridge!"

But the rap sheet doesn't end there. "Murphy has also eaten the mower, live power leads and the power source of our central heating unit, pulled up the underground sprinkler system and caused general havoc inside our house and out," says Leigh.

"Murphy also unfortunately dug up our dog who had died two weeks earlier and had to be rushed to the emergency vet and stay in overnight."

"He had eaten the towel we wrapped her in and the sheet also — but he didn't eat her."

"Murphy also was taken to Canberra for a dog show, and we did some sightseeing with him, where he proceeded to pee on Parliament House. But we love him despite it all!"

We're on the lookout for our naughtiest pet for 2016. If you have one who's worthy of the title, send us a story and a picture — preferably with a sign explaining why he or she is so naughty — and we'll publish the best.

Murphy the bull terrier, the fridge-eating dog and contender for naughtiest pet of the year.

Murphy Makes the Herald Sun

I'm sure many Bully owners attention was drawn to the article that appeared in the Herald Sun on August 29th 2016.

If only they knew Murphy is at many promotional events the Bull Terrier Club hold, as Murphy is a great ambassador for the breed. We won't be showing this article at any of our events though

I have no doubt we could fill a paper with things our Bullies have done over the years. They make us laugh, and they certainly make us cry.

THE BULL TERRIER CLUB OF VICTORIA INC
CHAMPIONSHIP SHOW
JUDGE: MS KERRY KING "BRASSHEAD" SA
30th April 2016

Thank you for inviting me to judge your championship show, the weather was a bit windy but at least the rain held off. I was made to feel very welcome on my arrival and enjoyed chatting to exhibitors and the committee after the judging.

The committee need to be commended for running the show with minimum resources.

It was unfortunate that I had so many scratching on the day but was grateful for the entries I did get.

I enjoyed judging on the day, some promising youngsters coming up with some good virtues, I look forward to seeing how they progress. My challenges and reserves could be placed either way, but after a lot of thought I was happy with my final decisions.

Murphy, Australia's first and only Bull Terrier to be titled a Working Weight Pull Dog

Murphy, aka Ch. Neut. Ch. Wakatang I Am The Walrus WWPDP is the first Bull Terrier in Australia to be titled a Working Weight Pull Dog. This means at 4 competitions hosted by the American Staffordshire Terrier Club of Victoria he managed to pull more than 8 times his body weight. And in his best performance so far, pulled over 21 times his own body weight.

Weight pulling is a dog sport involving a dog pulling a cart loaded with weight a short distance across dirt/gravel, grass, carpet, or snow. Many breeds participate in this sport, with dogs being separated into classes by weight. Sled dogs and bull breeds excel within their respective weight classes, having been historically bred to pull sleds and carts as working dogs, respectively.

Murphy pulling 727 kilograms

The cart, which weights 160kgs when empty is loaded with bricks as the competition progresses. The dogs have to pull the cart along a natural surface over a distance of 5 metres in under 1 minute. The events run by The American Staffordshire Club of Victoria are now recognised by Dogs Victoria and are held in accordance with Dogs Vic rules. It's at these events you are able to gain certificates towards your WWPDP or your WWPDX title (Working Weight Pull Dog Excellence)

Murphy at a training day, pulling some serious weight 😊

We took Murphy along to an event to see how he would go, he didn't start too well attacking the rope that attached him to the cart and he wouldn't let go. In typical Murphy style no less.

Needless to say, it was time to start some training with the boy. After a few more goes Murphy got the hang of it & became a contender to the big AmStaffs. He started pulling around the 350-400kg mark and then progressed up to 496kgs & then 538kgs. Murphy then at the last pull, managed to reach 664kgs and then pull 727kgs but it was after the judges called time. The recorded weight of 664kgs was 21 times his body weight, and beat his previous personal best by a whopping 168kgs.

This event is a great social day and it bonds dog with owner. If a dog doesn't want to pull the cart, they won't. And there are many dogs who don't manage to move the 160kg empty cart. It's all about making your dog want to come to you. No treats, no toys, just your command.

If you'd like to give it a go, The Alaskan Malamute Club of Victoria hold these events, and it's enter on the day check their webpage for further details www.amcv.org.au The Amstaffs club have already held their last event for 2016, check their events page for next year's events, and with their pulls, you must enter online

Book Review

The Canine Thyroid Epidemic – Answers you need for your dog

Authors Dr. W. Jean Dodds D.V.M. and Diana R. Laverdure

If you own a dog, pure bred or mixed breed, you really should read this book cover to cover. It should also be read by veterinarians as it has many updates and exposes some myths about thyroid diseases that has either not been taught at veterinary schools or miss information has been given to veterinarians.

Dr. Dodds has made the book easy to read even through this is a medical topic and has set out each chapter with not only the correct information, but also “Take home points” at the end of the chapters to condense what you have just read. If you feel your dog in ‘not quite right’ do have a full blood test done for thyroid diseases. So many symptoms and behavioural changes can indicate a thyroid problem. The majority of dogs suffer from hypothyroidism which is so easily fixed (not cured) so that your dog can again lead a normal and healthy life. It is just a matter of getting the correct dosage right for your dog.

Chapter five is of particular interest as Dr. Dodds outlines many side effects that canines suffer, from commonly administered drugs and vaccines and over vaccinations. Many case studies are in this book giving the reader insight as to what to look out for in their own animal. This includes not only pets and show dogs, but those who are obedience or agility dogs who are not performing to their usual standard.

It is also interesting to read that different breeds of dogs will present with very different needs when it comes to not only diagnosing the form of thyroid disease but also the amount of thyroxine to administer to the dog. In particular the sighthounds have different readings in their blood test results and need altered dosage of tablets.

Many skin problems, changes in behaviour, changes in coat, and changes in attitude maybe down to a low thyroid function. I recommend this book for all to read, then if you are worried, please seek a full thyroid function test be done one your pooch.
